Naama Brenner Abramovitch was born and raised in Haifa, Israel. She recently moved to San Francisco after spending several years in the policy world. She is now pursuing an M.A. in geography with a concentration in Resource Management and Environmental Planning.

Sabrina Bhangal is an undergraduate student at San Francisco State University, majoring in Biology with a concentration in Cell and Molecular Biology. She enjoys both science and writing, especially reading research articles. She one day hopes to do research of her own and to continue writing about science.

Michael Brown has always appreciated a diverse range of writing genres, recently culminating in a B.A. in technical and professional writing from SF State in 2012. Michael is a native of San Francisco’s Richmond District. He enjoys visiting the American bison paddock in Golden Gate Park during his regular walks to Ocean Beach. In his spare time, Mike is a science fiction enthusiast and a history buff, especially about professional boxing. He admits to being a bad swimmer, vows never to sing karaoke, and takes care of a Maltipoo named “Corporal Dwayne Hicks.”

Jennifer Chinchilla is scheduled to graduate from San Francisco State University in 2014. She is majoring in Biology with an emphasis in Physiology and has enjoyed everything—except Organic Chemistry. She takes pride in her excellent parallel parking skills and turns to dark chocolate in order to de-stress. Although she is not fond of typical dogs, she hopes to someday own an English Mastiff, which she considers closer to the bear family.

Kim DeCrescenzo graduated from the University of Colorado at Boulder in 2003. She moved to San Francisco in 2005 and worked in several restaurants throughout the city before discovering the Technical and Professional Writing program at SF State. In 2011, she completed a TFW certificate and plans to pursue a career in grant writing.

Jacklyn Dela Cruz is a graduating senior, majoring in technical writing at SF State. She enjoys anything involving the arts and will pursue writing and music production. Her dream is someday to own a huge farm where rescued animals can roam freely and she can grow her own organic food.

Shad Kish enrolled in a Masters degree program in Computer Science at the University of San Francisco, but later changed to graduate studies in Wireless Engineering, concurrent with a minor in Russian. She also enrolled in the Certificate program in Technical and Professional Writing and reports that she enjoys the challenge of all three. When not studying, she likes to ski, swim, play tennis, and run. Her heavy academic schedule has limited her, of late, to mostly jogging, hanging out with friends, going to movies, and sampling San Francisco’s exotic and interesting cuisines.

Sarah Kotcher grew up in San Francisco and spent three years during and after college, in Paris, France. She earned her B.A. degree in Political Science and French from Willamette University, Salem, Oregon. Kotcher is involved in San Francisco’s rich and interesting food industry and loves to eat, drink, and cook new things. She recently transitioned from outside sales to technical and science writing, after graduating with a certificate in Technical and Professional Writing from SF State, and looks forward to a new career adventure.

Devon Legge is currently a biology major at San Francisco State University. He plans to pursue a career working with and researching stem cells. He is passionate about music and while writing this article, found it hard not to become distracted by his guitar.

Clarence Mackey is a graduate student completing his second Bachelor’s degree in Technical and Professional Writing. He plans to use it along with his first degree in marketing to promote the rapid and global adoption of alternative energy.

Reyna Menjivar is the first in her family to go to college, earning B.A. degrees in Anthropology and Dance & Performance Studies from UC Berkeley. She is now completing post-baccalaureate pre-med courses at SF State. Her plan is to become an ob/gyn and one day to open a clinic for underrepresented communities. When Reyna is not studying or working, she likes to go hiking, watch movies, play with her cats and horseback ride.

Shaun Parker is a creative writing major and science connoisseur. His interests include writing, over-analyzing, and watching “Chopped” on the Food Network. He hopes to one day write for a living, but until then you can find him day dreaming and washing dishes at a popular burrito chain.