The Aarhus School of Business: www.asb.dk

The Aarhus school of Business was founded in 1939 and has had university status since 1956. The sixteen departments of the school include: Management Science, Organization and Management, Business Law, Information Science, International Business, Marketing, Economics, Applied Economics, and Finance. The language departments emphasize the commercial, technical, and legal applications of languages. A large number of the other courses are taught in English. The Aarhus School of Business has recently expanded. New classroom and office buildings have been added to the school. The Aarhus School of Business is the second largest business school in Denmark, with a total student population of over six thousand. Both research and teaching have a strong international emphasis.

Århus, Denmark

Århus is located on the east coast of the Jutland peninsula and it is the second largest city in Denmark. Founded by the Vikings in the year 1000, the city began to expand in 1900 because of industrialization. Greater Århus now has a population of half a million people, and the city's population is increasing steadily every year. The Danish School of Journalism is one of several Universities in Århus, so there is a high proportion of young people in the area. The City of Århus places great importance on preserving and protecting the environment. Public transportation and bikes are a high priority, and green parks fill the city. Conserving energy and recycling are also emphasized. Århus calls itself the "smallest big city in the world," due to its cultural wealth. Some of its cultural features include a lively music scene, many good discotheques, a casino, a variety of museum, art galleries, international cuisine, a vast number of sporting facilities, and bowling alleys. Århus is an excellent connection point to both the rest of Scandinavia and other parts of Europe. Århus is approximately four hours from Copenhagen by car and ferry.
