The academic program at Furtwangen is intended for graduate students interested in digital media. The courses run by the Department of Digital Media all deal with the key technologies of multi media and its rapidly growing spectrum of applications. In most cases the curriculum is multi disciplinary and covers the fields of general technology and computer science, business, economics and design. Furtwangen is consistently ranked highest among other German universities for innovation in their curricula. It was the first German university to teach Computer Science in Media. Business Applications of Computer Science, Product Engineering, and International Business Management and Computer Networking all represent model courses pioneered by the Fachhochschule Furtwangen.

Furtwangen, Germany

Furtwangen is located in the southern Black Forest region of Germany, population approximately 10,000. The River Danube's spring is located at the edge of town and the river (termed Breg at this location) flows through the middle of campus.

The French province of Alsace, the Swiss city of Basel or Lake Konstanz are all close enough to be destinations for day-trips. Furtwangen itself is an "official" holiday resort, the borough of Neukirch is a "state approved climatic health resort".
